The places where we live have a big impact on our health and wellbeing. From how our communities are planned and built, to how cultural traditions and social connections are supported and nurtured, quality of “place” is a key determinant in physical and mental health, and in individual and community wellbeing. The Forum is an opportunity to hear experts from a diverse range of fields talk about the interplay of place and wellbeing, and to explore the contributions heritage makes to the creation of healthy, sustainable communities; and a time for networking and becoming better acquainted with colleagues from around the province.
