An Archaeological Perspective on the Last 300 Years of Saskatchewan History

by Dr. Margaret Kennedy

Rusty cans and nails, broken pottery, shards of broken glass. Not very impressive on first glance but this is “Heritage in the Ground”. These examples of our recent past in Saskatchewan can tell us volumes about the way settler populations made their place in the province and helped it to become what it is today.

Dr. Margaret Kennedy recently retired from the University of Saskatchewan, after teaching archaeology there for 25 years. Dr. Kennedy has researched numerous historical archaeological sites throughout Saskatchewan, Western Canada and the USA.
